Record-setting performance by Howard Pechet

Guinness book honours Stage West veteran

Howard Pechet

"I think because of the business part (of my family background), I've been able to stay at it," he comments. "We knew a lot about food and beverage."

"We've got a good formula now – one or two straight plays, and then three musicals," he continues. "I've been writing a lot of the musicals with Nevin Grant, and Tim French. Our latest production 'One Hit Wonders' got standing ovations every night in Calgary. The next one will be 'Motown'."

Over the years, Pechet was involved in all aspects of the productions – negotiating, meeting with directors and choreographers, casting the shows, approving set designs, consulting on wardrobe, and shopping for props.

Based out of La Hoya, California, he has backed away from the day-to-day operations, but continues to produce and oversee each and every theatrical production. He is also a director of several corporations, including the Canadian Western Bank – which his family began in 1984.

He still makes his annual treks to London and New York to scout the hottest plays.

"You have to if you want to keep in touch, and try and beat everybody else to the rights to the better shows," he says.

And what are his favourite moments from those 490 productions?

"The guys I was probably proudest to work with were Gig Young and Gale Gordon," he offers. "They were both wonderful actors."

His favourite play was "84 Charing Cross Road", with lead actor Sandy Dennis.

"I collect antiquarian books," he relates. "I remember the book store in London (where I bought that book). I stopped there in the Sixties and Seventies, so it was really special."
